Last week, which we may hope was the last of winter, was one to be remembered. I do not think I ever witacssed a more wintry scene than the The trees already subdued by the previous sleet, submissively bent to the new burden imposed upon them, and hung their despondent heads in melancholy wee. The sun withheld his rays, and the sombre gray of the unnatural foliage of ice gave a peculiar tinge of sadness to the face of Nature. It is all gone, we hope, and now we begin to speculate upon what winter fature prospect may be. It is satisfactory to find that wheat and oats come through the ordeal unscathed, and that the promise of a good crop is bright. With regard to wheat, it is a
